Summer's Bounty

Shoppers at the Pee Dee Farmers Market drive through the shed, below, where they can choose from a variety of fresh food, garden plants, accessories and yard art. Year-round shops and restaurants make the market a regular destination for thousands of loyal customers. A visitors center will open soon.

Fresh, delicious produce is plentiful all around the state

By Marsha Hewitt Editor SC Market Bulletin

While people might complain about summer's heat, they certainly can't complain about the bountiful fruits and vegetables made possible by our climate.

Certified SC Markets all across the state are filled with nature's goodness, from fresh squash to sweet corn to tomatoes and peaches. Currently all three state farmers markets are brimming with produce. Two of our state's favorite fruits, peaches and watermelons, are at their peak. Supplies should last well into the summer.

At the Pee Dee State Farmers Market in Florence, several thousand customers drive through the market every day, with heavier traffic on the weekends.

According to manager Tre Coleman, June visitors totaled 141,223. "I know it's hard to believe, but we have car counters that count the number of vehicles that come in every day."

On Memorial Day, an astonishing 14,718 people came through the market, which was the highest number of visitors on a single day during the past several months.

Coleman, who has been at the market for 14 years, credited former SC Commissioner of Agriculture Les Tindal with the establishment of Pee Dee State Farmers Market, which opened in 1983. Tindal also developed the Southern Plant Festival, which evolved from a spring show in Florence to spring and fall Plant and Flower Festivals at the Pee Dee, Greenville, and Columbia State Farmers Markets.

"These shows have always provided plant and flower vendors an opportunity to showcase locally grown horticulture," said Martin Eubanks, Assistant Commissioner for SCDA Agricultural Services Division. "We now reach several hundred thousand consumers annually at these events."

Under Tindal's leadership, South Carolina became a leader among states in working directly with retail food buyers to increase awareness of our state's fruit and vegetable industry, along with row crops, livestock, and specialty products on an international basis, Eubanks continued.

Many states developed similar programs after the SC Department of Agriculture created opportunities for producers with retailers by providing grower and shipper information, crop information, and crop updates throughout the growing season directly with retail food buyers.

No matter which market people visit, they can enjoy fresh fruits and vegetables grown right here in South Carolina.

Hugh E. Weathers Commissioner

A Tribute to Tindal

In the office that I have the privilege to occupy, I follow some pretty impressive gentlemen who had a huge impact on agriculture. Les Tindal was certainly one. Mr. Tindal passed away last month and I want to devote this column to his memory.

As Commissioner of Agriculture from 1982 until 2002, he affected thousands of people across our state and beyond. Mr. Tindal certainly had all the qualifications to lead the department. Not only did he manage a dairy, he also grew cotton, soybeans and wheat in Clarendon and Sumter counties. If that weren't enough, he raised hogs and beef cattle. That diversified background prepared him well for this office.

As the voice for the South Carolina farmer, he was effective and popular. He ran unopposed in three of five elections. Farmers said there was little reason for anyone to run against him

You never heard anything negative about Mr. Tindal. He was a true Southern gentleman. Time and time again, people used the word "respect" when talking about him. To quote one of his friends, "He was always straight and he always did what he said." In my conversations with him over the years, I always found Commissioner Tindal to be quite frank with me.

Even before the years that he devoted to public service, Mr. Tindal was quite a leader. He was named one of the Top 15 Farmers in America by Ford Motor Co., and Progressive Farmer magazine named him Man of the Year in 1971.

At the state level, Mr. Tindal served several organizations -- president of South Carolina Crop Improvement, South Carolina Cattlemen, South Carolina Seedsmen, and South Carolina Soybean Association. Well known for promoting soybeans within our state and as an export commodity, he was also president of the American Soybean Association.

Also on the national level, Mr. Tindal was president of the National Association of State Departments of Agriculture and served as a member of the U.S. Department of Agriculture Policy Advisory Committee. He made quite an impact as a farmer from Pinewood!

As Commissioner, one of his most successful projects was the establishment of the Pee Dee Farmers Market in Florence. He worked for several years to develop that connection for farmers and consumers, which opened in 1983. It remains one of our most popular farmers market, with more than 140,000 visitors this June alone.

A trustee at Clemson University for 10 years, Mr. Tindal went to every home football game that he could. He served on the Black River Electric Cooperative Board of Directors for 55 years. He even had a road named for him in Pinewood. Today, Commissioner Tindal's son, David, manages an impressive farm operation from his office on Les Tindal Road, not far from Pinewood in Clarendon County

To quote a tribute from his memorial service: "He plowed deep and straight and didn't cut corners, so God made him a farmer."

On behalf of the farmers across South Carolina, I say thanks to Commissioner Les Tindal for his service to our industry and state.

Gamecocks Win Certified SC Grown Palmetto Series

The University of South Carolina won the Certified SC Grown Palmetto Series the second year in a row. The Palmetto Series is an annual points competition between the state's flagship universities in head-to-head athletic events. Points were also awarded for highest team GPA and for a food drive tackling hunger in their

Presented by the SC Department of Agriculture, the series fosters a fun competition between the historic rivals while connecting fans with farmers and to the food grown right here in South Carolina.

"South Carolina is home to championship level athletes and farmers, and SCDA is proud to be a part of this fierce, but friendly, rivalry that brings two great universities together to support our farmers," Commissioner Hugh Weathers said. "We encourage fans to look for the Certified SC Grown label and continue to support both our farmers and this great Points were awarded for the winner of each athletic contest between the two schools, including sports in which both teams competed as part of multiple-team tournaments. Points were also awarded for academics and the food drive benefitting Harvest Hope Food Bank and Golden Harvest Food Bank.

This year, the academic point broke the tie between the two universities.

USC earned eight points for wins in women's soccer, volleyball, golf, basketball, diving, men and women's tennis, and the academic point.

Clemson won seven points for the competition in men's soccer, football, basketball, baseball, golf, and women's cross country as well as the food drive.

"Our student-athletes dedicate themselves to excellence academically and in competition. I am so proud of their accomplishments and the coaches and staff who help them succeed," USC Athletics Director Ray Tanner said.

Our coaches, student-athletes, and staff all enjoy the Palmetto Series," commented Clemson Director of Athletics Dan Radakovich. "We look forward this competition continuing for years to come.'

The Gamecocks will celebrate the victory with a student-athlete back-to-school picnic on Aug. 24. The Palmetto Series trophy will be presented to USC on Sept. 16 during the first home game of the season.
